DENTON. The judicial seat of county of same name, in the center of which it is situated, is a handsome, prosperous and compactly built little city on the east division of the M., K. & T. Ry. at the junction of the D. extension of the same road, 233 miles northeast of Austin and 35 northwest of Dallas. It contains Methodist, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Cumberland Presbyterian, Presbyterian and Christian churches, splendid schools, good hotels, 2 banks—The First National and Exchange National—2 cotton gins, 2 flouring mills, the usual number of special and general stores, professional men, etc. The city also has an efficient fire department, which speaks well for a place of its size. A fine opera house, having a seating capacity of 600, is one of the many attractions. Three weekly newspapers, the Denton Times, Denton Monitor and the Chronicle—all Democratic—are published and keep the citizens well
